

Professional Computing Association

Cnetso joins the professional Computing Association

Cnetso Limited is now a recognized member of the professional computing association.

What is PCA?

The Professional Computing Association is a trade association of companies, both big and small, that are involved in the computing business. We've been about since 1993. Joint turnover of our members is over £50 billion.

The PC Association's main activities are aimed to benefit its members, and we recognise that giving good customer service and promoting our Code of Practice can only be good for our members.

Testimonials:

David Gregory - Microsoft Ltd

With the speed of business life today you NEED associations. Manufacturers don't always have the bandwidth to hear everyone's view...even though you want to. We find relationships with associations invaluable to get that widespread input into what we should be doing through a representative voice

Scott Jackson - Creative Computing

It makes you stand out from the crowd, shows your customers that you mean business and that you are interested in advancements in this industry; it keeps you in touch. We wouldn't have it any other way

Richard Austin - MD Evesham.com

Since its inception the PC Association has grown from strength to strength. As one of the founder members, I can say that the investment in membership has been worthwhile to Evesham Micros. The PCA provides an added comfort factor for our customers, as well as an informal forum for discussing the things that matter in our industry. The size and range of our membership makes the PCA a powerful advocate in the national and international arena for the needs of the British Personal Computer industry.
